

Seven Ways to Beat the Burnout Blues

THE BOTTOM LINE: If you start to experience burnout at work, make changes that will keep you focused and help you feel reenergized.

Have you ever wondered why some people leave jobs after two or three years and others stay for 15 or 20? Burnout may not be the only reason people leave their jobs, but it often is a factor.

You may be experiencing burnout if you feel bored, fatigued, apathetic, impatient and constantly irritated with your co-workers.

But don't panic, there's hope. Some of the secrets to long-term job happiness are revealed below in the words of people who have avoided burnout.

Change Positions Within Your Company

“I avoided burnout by changing positions every two to four years. During my 27-year career, I worked in sales, market research, technical management, operations and product management. The changes kept me interested and excited about my work,” says Jan Powell, from Dallas, Texas, who worked for 27 years at Xerox.

Find Like-Minded People

“To avoid burnout, the most useful tool I have found is to identify like-minded people with whom I can share humor, have fun and vent frustrations, when needed. These must be people who share a similar sense of humor as yourself and people you trust implicitly,” says Bobbe White, from Quincy, Illinois, who has worked as a business development officer at a community bank for 21 years.

Seek Out Short-Term Projects

“I have avoided burnout because, in addition to my normal routine job, I seek out short-term projects, working with different teams each time. “These projects could be on cost-cutting efforts, improving quality efforts, charitable causes or other social functions for the company,” says Jaswant Kaur, a nine-year employee of the Samling Group of Companies. Kaur lives in Kuching, Malaysia.

Get More Education

“I was previously with a technology company for more than 13 years and became burned out since I wasn't able to go anywhere within the company. I went back to school and received a B.B.A. in management and an M.S. in human resources and training.

“The company paid for my schooling and knew when I started the master's program that I'd leave after graduation if no opportunities arose. That happened, and I left within 30 days after graduating. They felt it was worth it to keep me working at the company for the time I was in school,” says Teresa Johnson, from Southlake, Texas.

Keep On Learning

“I worked at Sears for nearly 10 years many years ago. The number-one thing I've learned through many years of employment is that it's important to continue to learn new things,” says Melinda L. Surbough, from Dallas, Texas, who is now the managing editor of Today's Dallas Woman magazine.

Have Pride in Your Job

“I work in a busy medical office. Having pride and confidence in my job and doing work that I enjoy are very important to me. These, combined with appreciation and caring from management, have kept me in my job for more than 17 years,” says Lucretia Rolland, a receptionist at The Dermatology Center in Irving, Texas.

Don't Wait

If you start to experience burnout, don't wait until it affects your work, and don't start looking for a new job. Instead, try making positive changes in your present job. Talk to your supervisor and discuss changes that could reenergize you.

Please Note >> Millenium Staffing does not claim or imply any ownership of content on links or in articles viewed. The information contained in articles and links is informational only, and are not an endorsement of the opinions, products, or services presented. Millenium Staffing is not responsible for the legality or accuracy of this information, and we are not responsible for any costs incurred while using this information or visiting these sites.